After attempting to scan the envelope on several occasions, I consistently pick up a medium-sized room with pale walls (blue or light-yellow), relatively austere but with a small painting on one wall. There is a rectangular wooden table in the room. A man is sitting at the table and a second man enters the room carrying a briefcase. He sits at the table, opens the case and extracts manila-file type folders. There is a confrontational atmosphere rather than an atmosphere of exchange of information. As it is like an attorney confronting a client, establishing the veracity of the client's statements. It is a very uncomfortable situation for the first man.

I felt that I came upon a hard man-made
structure.

It was very. An isolated area.

I could not hear
anything but the structure seemed to have a comforting effect.
